DISASTER IN ADRIATIC CANARD, SAYS EMBASSY

No Austrian Projectile Has Yet Hit French Vesel. WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The French Government, through its Embassy here today denied the report emanating from German sources that the Austrian forts at Cattaro had sunk a large French warship. The dispatch reads: "The French Minister of Marine has made known that the report of the sink-ing of a French warship by Austrian forts is entirely false, and that there is nothing to justify such a story. Up to date no French warship has been reached by an Austrian projectile." Another disjustch from Bordeaux to the Embassy dealing with the moratorium as applied to banks reads as follows:

"The French Government published today in the official journal a new decree deciding the prorogation of payments and the withdrawal of money deposited banking establishments. According to the terms of article 5 of the moratorium, the benefit of the sundry delays given to the banking establishments by this de-cree cannot be claimed by any corporation which would have paid dividends on its stock or on founders' shares. This disposition has been taken for the reason that the creditors of banking establish ments, and in particular those who have checking accounts, are so situated trathey must have preference over stock.

DOUBLE BATTLE DUE AFTER AISNE FIGHT, STRATEGISTS SAY

Expect War to End With Great Britain Aims to Break Simultaneous Conflicts Waged West of Rhine and in East Prussia.

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS

That the battle which will end the war will be fought soon, probably before the extreme cold weather sets in, is the opinion of foreign military attaches here They believe that it must take place probably immediately after the battle of the Aisne enters into its decisive stages. And the majority of them look for simultaneous conflicts, one in Belglum and west of the Rhine, and the other in the eastern theatre of activities, probably in East Prussia.

French officers to whom I talked on my trip from the front seemed to share the same opinion. They declared that there was such a decided contrast between the spirits of the Germans and the Allies that it became very noticeable. The French soldiers are absolutely confident of victory. In fact they are so convinced they are the superiors of the Germans that the chief difficulty of officers is keeping their troops from recklessly exposing themselves.

I had an opportunity personally to observe the spirit of the French soldier. The thing that most impressed me was his complete cheerfulness and his desire to continue on the offensive night and day. I was surprised to find regiments of soldiers made up from those who left the French shops and factories-and who, according to the German military comcould not stand hardship-absolutely disregarding exposure, and in every way healthy. Under a nasty cold drizzle, with their uniforms soaked and e water dripping from the lips of their noses, they would sing and jest with each

BRITISH WARSHIPS, LURKING OFF CAPES, COVET CONTRABAND

Up Practice of Supplying German Cruisers From This Port.

Federal Government Starts Investigation to Discover Original Shippers of Norwegian Steamships' Cargo.

While agents of the Federal Government are starting an investigation to discover the original shippers of the contraband, destined for German warships, in the Norwegian steamships Fram and Sommerstad, the vessels are discharging their cargoes at the new Municipal Pier at the foot of Dock street, and two British cruisers, cheated of their prey, are lying idly off the Delaware Capes, ing the German cruisers Karlsruhe and Dresden from this port. Several weeks ago the cruiser Essex was seen there,

She was relieved by the converted auxillary cruiser Caronia and today another vessel, believed to be the Britiannia. made her appearance. The cruiser seen by several incoming vessels has four funnels and is constructed along the same lines as the Cressy, Aboukir and Hogue, sunk a few days ago by German submarines. The watchful waiting policy of the Caronia and her reinforce ment, shipping men stated today, did more to make Captain Axelsen, of the Sommerstad, and Captain Grindheim, of the Fram, to change their minds about delivering their cargoes than did orders from the owners of their vessels. Each fortune for his work, but the fear of be ing captured and imprisoned until the end of the war made them decide to surrender the clearance papers and remain in port until a neutral cargo could re-place the contraband stowed in the holds. The Department of Commerce and Jus tice, upon the request of the British Government, has taken up the shipment ports. In addition to investigating the case of the Sommerstad and Fram, they are looking after the American steamship Lorenzo and Norwegian steamship Thor, both of which were captured in the act of delivering coal to German war ves-sels. A significant fact in the capture of the Thor is that she was under charte by the Inter-American Steamship Company of New York, the same concern thich has contracted for the stad and Fram. It is also said that this company employed the four other Norwegian steamships sailing from here the last two months with similar cargoes. On of them, the Heina, was captured off St. Thomas, D. W. I., by a French cruiser, William J. Grandfield & Co of nos Walnut street, were the local agents
